FEATURED SCHOLAR

(From the Fall 2010 MU McNair Journal)

Jenny Tone-Pah-Hote, PhD; Post doctoral Research Associate; University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill

Participating in the McNair Scholars Program as an undergraduate helped me to define and start working toward my long-term career goals. It played an important role in introducing me to American Indian history, a field that I still work in as postdoctoral researcher. I also gained skills in the McNair Scholars Program that smoothed the transition from college to graduate school and that I continue to use as a scholar and teacher.

The McNair Scholars Program has played a significant role in my career because it gave me the opportunity to engage in the original, archival research that led me to pursue a doctoral degree in American Indian and U.S. history. Through the McNair Program, I completed a research project that explored the intellectual life of Henry Roe Cloud, an early twentieth century, American Indian educator. This project was invaluable because it showed me how to do historical research and writing. By having discussions with my mentor, Dr. Jeffrey Pasley, a historian, I learned how to negotiate and engage debates in the literature in Native history and formulate research questions. The McNair project also taught me how to navigate archives and construct historical arguments. I returned to these lessons throughout graduate school for assignments and later my dissertation.

Not only did the McNair Scholars Program introduce me to the idea of becoming a professor of American Indian history, it also provided me with a set of tools in public speaking, crafting applications, and professionalization that prepared me to attend graduate school. The workshops that I took part in focused on creating polished applications, GRE preparation, and time management, all of which gave me resources to draw from as I completed my graduate education. In addition, as a McNair Scholar, I took a course in teaching techniques. Later, as a teaching assistant, I borrowed strategies from this class to generate discussions for my own courses.

The McNair Scholars Program has been critical in my development as a researcher. As a Postdoctoral Research Associate in American Studies at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, I still use and refine the skills I developed as a McNair Scholar. And, I hope to continue engaging them as professor of American Indian and U.S. history.
